Though written during a turbulent time in the United States (1964), Simon and Garfunkel’s song, “The Sounds of Silence,” shows how little we have progressed as a country and how possibly our man-made possessions have caused a regression of sorts. The lyrics remind us that even in 2017, we neglect living by remaining silently affixed: destruction from within.

Intro-rough: Though written during a tumultuous time in the United States, Simon and Garfunkel’s song, “The Sounds of Silence,” shows how little we have progressed as a country and how possibly our man-made possessions have caused a regression of sorts. The lyrics remind us that even in 2017, we neglect living by remaining silently affixed: destruction from within.

Worship a false idol.

Superficiality and divisibility based on conformity and divisibility trap them.

Write it off the maps!
Though written during a turbulent time in the United States (1964), Simon and Garfunkel’s song, “The Sounds of Silence” shows how little we have progressed as a country and how quite possibly our man-made possessions have caused a regressions of sorts. The lyrics remind us that even in 2017, we neglect living by remaining silently affixed: destruction from within. Clearly then, the neon god that Simon and Garfunkel speak of represents the most important image in the song.

To begin with, the image depicting worship to a false idol represents the ugly truth of what our society has become. The lines “the people bowed and prayed to the neon god they made" (29-30) depict a society in which our manmade versions of ‘life’ have become more important than living life itself. In other words, people have become mere shells of the appearance of life. Because distractions of technology create masks that shield true identities, society has made us a cookie-cutter planet where everyone is emulating and one-upping everyone else: “ten thousand people maybe more” (l17) needing wanting the next best material possession.

Disappointingly so, technology comes before family, even at the dining room table in the security of home. Families are “talking without speaking, hearing without listening, and writing songs they will never share” (lines 18-20). Cellphones and IPADS are affixed to craniums conversing with no-one, “followers” rather than the shared DNA sitting right in front of them. These neon gods have created a society based on superficiality and divisibility, where one never really knows, or cares for that matter, about anyone else. Since no one cares enough to lift their heads and speak up or listen up, their masks of conformity continue to trap them within the silence.

“The Sounds of Silence” has a message for each and every one of us. It is important to remember, everyday, that silence and conformity can be dangerous. Though it takes courage, we need to accept and like who we are. Perhaps, then, others can do the same.
Intro-rough: Though written during a turbulent time in the United States (1964), Simon and Garfunkel’s song, “The Sounds of Silence” shows how little we have progressed as a country and how quite possibly our man-made possessions have caused a regressions of sorts. The lyrics remind us that even in 2017, we neglect living by remaining silently affixed: destruction from within.

Worship a false idol

a society based on superficiality and divisibility

masks of conformity trap them
Write your closing. Again, let’s make it simple:

- SO-What is the purpose/message of the song and the ideas?
- SO-Why does it matter? Make a personal connection.
  - Drop the mic!

Example 1: “The Sounds of Silence” has a message for each and every one of us. It is important to remember, everyday, that silence consumes and conform us; consequently, it is the danger to be feared. Though it takes courage, we need to accept and like who we are. Perhaps, then, others can do the same.

Example 2: “The Sounds of Silence” has a message for each and every one of us even forty years after its release. It is important to remember, everyday, that silence creates conformity and destruction. Though it takes courage, we need to accept that silence doesn’t have to be the status-quo; perhaps, then, others can do the same. Determine, first, are your desires bringing moral justice to your life as well as others? Are you listening to the whispers of ‘neon gods’ or the whispers of prophets? Have you turned to the cold and damp? Your choices write your message on the banner of your life. Now make your choice.

MUST WRITE YOUR OWN